

Notre Dame du Rouet- Chapel

DISCOVERY THE ROUET CHAPEL

The chapel is located on the cape of the Virgin, to the east of the village center. It is a place of peace and spirituality, nestled between sea and hill with a beautiful view.

It is built on a wooded promontory of triangular Aleppo pines, prickly bushes similar to those encountered in the scrubland. It overlooks the sea, the creeks and the bay of Marseilles.

On the top you can admire west: Rouet of the beach and port in the east: the cove of Salty Water and its railway viaduct stuck between two cliffs.

Inside the chapel, you will find a statue dedicated to Notre Dame du Rouet, representing the Virgin seated and breastfeeding her child.

The current building was built in the seventeenth century. The 1653 date is written on the lintel of the door (reconstituted from the restoration of the building) and previously on the main entrance arch.

This chapel "replaces the old chapel that already existed at the time of the first appearances of the Saracens" (excerpt of the inscription on a stone from 1877).

A LITTLE HISTORY

The oldest document referring to this "ancient chapel" dated December 4, 1253 (Saint-Sauveur funds, departmental archives of the Bouches du Rhone)

A historical note said "Notre Dame du Rouet was a lookout of the Abbey of Saint Victor she was, a time Sunday property." Receiving as such, The first greeting of the ships are turning from long trips and arriving on the coast. Sheal so owned a small flock of sheep whose income permitted the maintenance of the building.

At various times hermits have stayed.

RESTORATION

The chapel was restored and enlarged in 1877. Without maintenance after the 1914-1918 war, she was threatened with total ruin.

Carryens of enterprising, helped by the municipality (the building being communal) and faithful donations, have completely renovated; ave doing a lot of heart and taste. The yembellished with three vital that illuminate the chapel, designed and built by Father Antoine SIMONI, former pastor of Carry le Rouet.

At sunrise, the Virgin is facing south. The openings in the vaulted "pink stone Couronnne" are at the entrance to the chapel (near the cross with Christ cut out on the sky background).
